Part 2: Grammar A. Hyphens Use a hyphen to join words and phrases when they are connected by a word, phrase or punctuation mark like a colon, semi-colon or question mark. For example, you can use the following hyphens when writing: One day she brought her book. When I got home We went to the store. Although the second and fourth examples are correct, the third one is incorrect. We would use "when I got home" instead of "when I got home" because it's not connected to another phrase. When you write a sentence like this, the hyphen tells the reader that you're going to start a new phrase. Let's review the following word pairs and see how you would use a hyphen to connect them. They don't look like numbers, but we write them as numbers. We don't use hyphens in this sentence because the numbers don't match the rest of the sentence. There are a lot of words, but the last one has two in a row, so we need a hyphen. Use a hyphen to join two or more words and phrases that start with the same letter or letters, like the letters in "might" and "might not." In the following sentence, we have "might" and "might not" written in lowercase. Might there be a problem? We use a hyphen in this sentence. If the two words weren't connected, the phrase would be "there might be a problem?" We use the hyphen because the words start with the same letter, and you don't need to use an apostrophe in the singular form of night. B. Plurals There are times when you will use a singular noun, but want to add more words to it. In this case, you will use the plural. If you write a sentence with a list of numbers, you would use the plural form. He wrote a list of two numbers. If you write a sentence that has more than one number, use the plural form. His book was two numbers long. A good way to remember whether you would use a singular or a plural is to start with the first letter of the noun 82157476af
